DRUM TYPES AND STYLES THAT WE TEACH

If you want to learn to play a particular kind of music on a percussion instrument, we will help you learn how to play it. Our private drum lessons are customized to meet your needs, because playing should be both fun and beneficial to your overall skill set. Our individualized lesson plans take the kind of music that you want to learn to play and work in the skills that you need to learn if you want to improve. Private lessons are a great option for people who know exactly what kind of music they want to play, but we can also help you out if you need to try a few styles before you decide where to focus your attention.

We mostly teach on traditional drum sets, which are versatile instruments. Once you speak to us about your musical interests, we will put together a lesson plan that teaches you what you need to know while learning to play what you want to play. We truly believe that lessons are most effective when they are fun, engaging, and informational all at the same time.

TAKE THE TIME TO PRACTICE!

We recommend that our drum students practice at least 20 minutes a day. However, we never require you to practice. If something happens and you just don't have time that week, we understand!

Practicing is key to improving, though, and the players who get the most out of our lessons are the ones who practice regularly. Playing music involves the whole body, from your brain to your bones. Practice is an important way to learn how to put all of the different components of playing together. Muscle memory and automatic reactions are important parts of becoming a better drummer, and both will benefit from increased practice time. Overall, practice will make you a better percussionist!
