

9/11 Flight 93 Remembered

This is the path that Flight 93 took as it hit the ground near the boulder, in the center of this field. There were no casualties on the ground.

BY: DR. R. PLETSCH

The world certainly did change on September 11, 2001. Terrorists hijacked four commercial airliners and, in a suicide mission, killed nearly 3,000 people. This was the deadliest attack on American soil by a foreign entity.

Our students, as citizens of the world, deserve to know the story. Most of us know a family that was affected. However, we have people who say it's too traumatic for school-age children. But these same news outlets constantly talk about the beheading of American journalists and, while not showing the incidents, scroll across the bottom of the screen the website that you can go look at it. They also could not wait for us to view the violence in Missouri and some stations even replayed the violence that occurred after the Rodney King verdict.

Our elementary school students are too young to know of these events. During a period from 2002 to 2013, I was a principal at three schools and conducted a memorial type assembly for 9/11 each year. I never heard a complaint by a parent. In fact, many thanked me for bringing forth information they did not even know about. A few teachers did voice their concern and later joined the program -- calling it Patriots' Day was a little easier for the younger kids. Several students, especially the 8th graders, thanked me and their teachers because some of them had never seen the film of the planes hitting the towers.

One of the most compelling stories that they deserve to know about was the courage demonstrated by the 33 passengers and 7 crew members of Flight 93. It was scheduled to leave Newark, NJ and go to San Francisco. Kids can research this and a few made for TV movies made a valiant effort to tell their story. The flight was delayed about a half hour in New Jersey and, therefore, when the terrorists took over the flight the people on the ground already knew any plane in the air, refusing to land, was a terrorist on a suicide mission. After the plane was taken over, 13 passengers made 37 phone calls telling officials and family members what was occurring. The passengers became aware of the New York and Washington, DC incidents. Instead of sitting around and crying, they planned an action. If they could not take over the plane, maybe they could prevent a similar disaster to what had already occurred. The passengers said good-bye to loved ones and attacked the cockpit. The terrorists kept control of the plane and they dove the plane upside-down into the Pennsylvania countryside. At a speed of 563 mph and carrying 7,000 gallons of fuel, the explosion was similar to that at the World Trade Center, but being in the earth, the voice box recorder was retrieved, as was DNA from all the victims.

Good teachers can give great lessons about these, and, of course, being age-appropriate could vary from research to actually listen to the phone calls. I used the last words of passenger, Todd Beamer, "Let's roll" on all my weekly bulletins from that forward. We will never know how many lives these brave people saved, but later information made by investigators including information from the flight data recorder, it was determined that the target would have been the US Capitol Building in DC. Our kids deserve to know of the efforts of these passengers. The National Park Service is in the process of developing the National Memorial near Shanksville, PA. My family and I just returned from our third visit to this hallowed ground.
